

MEMORANDUM

TO: Edwards for President
FROM: Global Strategy Group, LLC
RE: Updated electability data
Date: August 27, 2007

Synopsis:

Nationwide general election polling shows John Edwards is the Democrat with the best chance of defeating the Republican candidate in the 2008 general election for President. Edwards is the only Democrat with a significant lead in a head-to-head match-up against Republican frontrunner Giuliani. Against the other three major Republican candidates, Edwards’ average margin of victory is virtually identical to that of Barack Obama, and significantly higher than Hillary Clinton’s average margin.

Edwards also outperforms the other Democratic candidates in match-ups with Republican candidates in key battleground states including Iowa, Wisconsin, and Ohio. Further, unlike other Democrats who must “run the table” in states where Democrats have been competitive in recent elections, Edwards brings new states into play. This provides alternate scenarios – and a margin for error – when it comes to amassing 270 electoral votes.

National electability:

These tables summarize nationwide general election polling since Memorial Day. This one shows the average margin for each Democrat for polls in which they are included in horse race questions.

| General Election Match-ups | | | |
|-----------------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------|---------------------|
| | Edwards | Clinton | Obama |
| Rudy Giuliani..... | +4 (10 polls) | 0 (21 polls) | +2 (19 polls) |
| John McCain | +6 (7 polls) | +3 (12 polls) | +6 (11 polls) |
| Mitt Romney | +16 (6 polls) | +9 (11 polls) | +15 (7polls) |
| Fred Thompson.... | +12 (8 polls) | +5 (14 polls) | +11 (17 polls) |

- Edwards is the only Democrat with a significant lead against Republican frontrunner Giuliani.
- Against the other three major Republican candidates, Edwards’ average margin of victory is identical to or greater than Obama’s, well ahead of Clinton’s.

- In looking at the overall win-loss-tie records, Edwards again stands out with easily the best total record.
- At least one poll in the last two and a half months shows Clinton losing to every Republican challenger, even Romney and Thompson, who neither defeat nor tie either Obama or Edwards, confirming Clinton as the weakest major Democrat in the general election.
- Edwards' status as the best Democrat against frontrunner Giuliani is again confirmed by this measure, as he suffers no losses, while both Clinton and Obama struggle to win more than they lose in that matchup.

State-by-state electability:

- Even more important than national polls, Edwards outperforms other Democratic candidates in key battleground states, including Iowa, Wisconsin, and Ohio.
- Unlike other Democrats, who will be forced to “run the table” of states where Democrats have been competitive in recent elections, Edwards brings new states into play. This provides alternative scenarios – and a margin for error – when it comes to winning 270 electoral votes.
